The Master of Engineering in Aircraft Systems Integration, sponsored by EADS-Spain, has been specifically designed for recent graduate engineers, and working professionals who want to develop and lead projects of Systems Integration. Of courses are given in English by internationally recognized in their fields coming from the key players in the aeronautical business, including industry, academia, government and regulators.

Student Profile

- Graduates in Engineering
Preferably: Aeronautical/Aerospace, Industrial, Telecommunication
- Demonstrated Proficiency in English
- International experience (work abroad programs, Erasmus...)

The Master

There is no single degree that provides the solid technical background and the global vision of processes through all stages of an aircraft system's lifecycle required to become an engineer in systems integration. In fact, it usually takes many years of professional experience to achieve the required know-how, and for this reason there is no enough systems integration engineers to meet the demand of the leading high-tech aerospace companies.

To respond the increasing demand for these professionals, Carlos III University of Madrid and EADS Spain have jointly designed the Master in Aircraft Systems Integration (MASI), a 1-year postgraduate program specifically aimed at recent graduate engineers, and working professionals, who want to develop and lead projects of Systems Integration.
